John H. Gates, Chief of Police, Fatally Shot Tuesday.

WAS MAKING ARREST

Unfortunate Man Was Native of Gatesburg—Removed to Ohio About Twelve Years Ago—Was Efficient Police Officer.

Word was received here yesterday that John H. Gates, Chief of Police at Medina, Ohio, had been shot and instantly killed on the public square at that place early Tuesday morning. Henry Blakeslee, aged 48, village marshal, was found hiding in a haymow of a neighbor following an eight-hour search by officers.

Blakeslee, who had attempted suicide, admitted having slain Gates, saying the latter threatened his life.

Blakeslee had shot himself in the side and is dangerously wounded. He is under guard.

Blakeslee's uniform, with two loaded shotgun shells in the pocket, was found in the basement of a clothing store, where he changed his clothes each day. Two similar shells were found near the scene of the shooting.

Chief Gates was a son of the late Solomon and Elizabeth Gates and was born at Gatesburg. He was about 60 years old and spent the greater part of his life in Centre and Blair counties. Twelve years ago he removed to Medina, Ohio, and subsequently became Chief of Police of that town. He was a member of the Lutheran church, also of the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Catherine Elder Gates, and these children: David, William, Mary and Effie, all at home. Surviving also are a brother, Isaac Gates, of Tyrone, and a sister, Mrs. Henry Harpster, of near Tyrone. Funeral services will be held this afternoon at Medina, Ohio.

James Rutland, of Sterling, Illinois, is enjoying a visit with old time friends in and near by Bellefonte. Mr. Rutland is making his first trip to Centre County in thirty-six years. He was raised in the neighborhood of Howard. While in Bellefonte he has been entertained by a cousin, Sheriff Yarnell.

H. S. MOORE PLANNING NEW STRUCTURAL PLANT

May Locate Large Modern Building at Milesburg.

TO COST ABOUT $10,000

Considering Putting Plant on Site Adjoining the State Centre Electric Company—Would Mean Employment for Additional Men.

H. S. Moore, who for some years has been operating a structual steel building plant midway between Bellefonte and Milesburg, is making plans for putting up a new and larger plant to cost from $8,000 to $10,000. He may locate it on a site adjoining and owned by the State-Centre Electric Co., at Milesburg. Should negotiations with this in view fail to be completed Mr. Moore probably will locate his new plant on the site of his present operation.

It is proposed putting up a building constructed entirely of structural iron. The equipment will be the most modern type. With the completion of the enlarged plant a larger force of men will be employed.

Mr. Moore has been engaged in making structural iron and steel work for use in bridge and various kinds of building operations. From a very modest beginning his plant has been expanded until now quite a number of men are employed and orders of considerable magnitude are handled

BIG CIRCUS COMING

Hagenback & Wallace Show to Visit Bellefonte Wednesday, May 31st.

The big Hagenback & Wallace circus is scheduled to exhibit in Bellefonte on Wednesday, May 31st. A special train of fifty-eight cars conveys the circus from one town to another. It is said that the Hagenback & Wallace show has the greatest collection of trained animals of all kinds to be found in the world.

This will be the largest circus train that has ever visited Bellefonte. Ringling Bros. circus had fifty-four cars when it exhibited in Bellefonte some years ago.

Majority of Delegates to Chicago Convention Thus Far Elected are Uninstructed.

More than one-half of the 985 delegates to the Republican national convention, to be held in Chicago June 6th, have been elected and of this number it is not much more than an even break on the matter of instructions or no instructions. The total number of delegates elected is 554. There have been 211 elected with instructions, and 343 who have no instructions and are therefore free to vote as they see fit when they arrive at Chicago. In the next few weeks the remaining 431 delegates will be named. If the same ratio is maintained the convention will meet with a majority of all the delegates uninstructed.

The figures on Republican selection of delegates as officially compiled are as follows: Total number of delegates, 985. Necessary to nominate, 493. Total number chosen to date, 538; instructed, 211; uninstructed, 343; to be chosen this week, 8; to be chosen next week, 100.

The instructed delegates are as follows; Sherman 58; Fairbanks, 48; Cummins, 50; Ford, 30; La Follette, 25. Total, 211.

The selections to date are:

Delaware—Uninstructed, 6.
Florida—Uninstructed, 8.
Georgia—Uninstructed, 12.
Indiana (Fairbanks)—Instructed, 30.
Connecticut—Uninstructed, 14.
Kansas—Uninstructed, 20.
Iowa (Cummins)—Instructed, 26.
Kentucky (Fairbanks)—Instructed, 18. uninstructed, 12.
Illinois (Sherman)—Instructed, 58; uninstructed, 12.
Louisiana—Uninstructed, 12.
Maine—Uninstructed, 12.
Michigan (Ford)—Instructed, 30.
Minnesota (Cummins)—Instructed, 24.
Mississippi—Uninstructed, 2.
Missouri—Uninstructed, 36.
Nebraska—Uninstructed, 16.
Nevada—Uninstructed, 6.
New Hampshire—Uninstructed, 8.
New York—Uninstructed, 87.
North Carolina—Uninstructed, 21.
North Dakota (La Follette)—Instructed, 10.
Oklahoma—Uninstructed, 20.
Philippines—Uninstructed, 2.
Puerto Rico—Uninstructed, 2.
South Carolina—Uninstructed, 11.
Tennessee—Uninstructed 10.
Virginia—Uninstructed, 15.
Wisconsin (La Follette)—Instructed, 15; uninstructed, 11.

Total—Instructed, 211; uninstructed, 343.

Delegates to be elected this week are:
Montana—April 21, 8.
Elected next week:
Massachusetts—April 25, 36.
New Jersey—April 25, 16.
Ohio—April 25, 48.

The exact sentiment existing in the States where the delegates are uninstructed is difficult to analyze. In most of the States the disposition is to send uninstructed delegates to Chicago, favorable to either Hughes or Roosevelt, with the expectation that after honest deliberation the delegates will support the man who develops the greatest strength and gives promise of defeating President Wilson.

In Florida the sentiment is for Roosevelt and Hughes. In Delaware, where the delegates are uninstructed, the vote will be cast for General du Pont on the first ballot and then for Hughes. In Kansas 15 of the delegates expressed themselves favorable to Hughes, and five for Weeks. In Georgia and Louisiana the sentiment is favorable to Roosevelt.

Hughes leads in Maine. In Minnesota ex-Senator Root is strong, with indications that the delegates will finally go to Roosevelt after the early balloting. Roosevelt and Hughes divide the sentiment in Missouri, with two delegates favorable to Weeks. New Hampshire and North Carolina delegates have expressed favor for Hughes, although uninstructed. Roosevelt will probably have the support of all the delegates from Montana, while Nebraska, although strongly Progressive, is expected to give her delegates to Hughes. The Progressives of this State placed Justice Hughes in the primaries, but he forced the withdrawal of his name.

In the primaries next week Ohio will name all of her delegates for ex-Senator Burton, while New Jersey and Massachusetts will name uninstructed delegates.

State's Township Roads.

An opinion was given at Harrisburg last Friday to the State Highway Department by Deputy Atty. General Keller to the effect that existing legislation does not authorize the Highway Commissioner to build State aid highways in townships on State highway routes; that townships and counties may, under the act of 1913, contribute to the cost of reconstruction and improvement of State highways in townships in the same manner as provided for State aid highways; that the entire cost of maintenance and repair of such State highways reconstructed by the aid of townships and counties must be paid by the State, and that the State share of such reconstruction and maintenance must be paid out of State highway funds, as distinguished from State aid highway funds. This opinion supplements that given a few days ago in regard to State reconstruction and maintenance of State highways within boroughs, and establishes a line of procedure which will be followed for the remainder of the appropriation year.

ABANDONS HER BABY; CLAIMS IT NEXT DAY

Woman Thought Child Would Be Placed in Home.

WAS SENT TO HOSPITAL

Poverty Prompted Woman to Rash Act—Worry Over Child's Future Caused Her to Reveal Identity and Take Little One Home.

Hard pressed by poverty, a woman on Monday night abandoned her three weeks old baby, leaving it in a basket on the porch of the Sisters' home on Bishop Street. The infant was found about 11 o'clock at night and was taken to the hospital. On Tuesday evening the mother called at the hospital and claimed the child.

The identity of the woman was revealed on Tuesday afternoon when she visited the office of a Bellefonte physician and explained that it was her child that had been found. Accompanied by another woman and a man she went to the hospital several hours later and took the baby away.

The facts as we understand them are that the woman formerly resided near by Bellefonte but later removed to a town in the western end of the State. When she abandoned the child on the porch of the Sisters' home it was her expectation that the Sisters would find it and place it in a Catholic home, a note pinned to the baby's clothing explaining that it had been baptized a Catholic. As matters turned out the baby was not found by the Sisters but by others who had it taken to the hospital. When the mother learned of this she became so greatly worried that she finally revealed her identity and asked that she be allowed to take the baby home. The note pinned to the infant's clothing contained this message:

"Put this poor, little helpless baby in a home. Its name is Mary and was baptized a Catholic. I cannot keep her and I trust her into your care."

The child was discovered by Michael Shields while he was walking home, As Mr. Shields was passing the Lyric Theatre he met Miss Anna Curry and they walked together on the South side of Bishop Street. As they passed the Sisters' home Mr. Shields called Miss Curry's attention to several packages lying on the porch. Mr. Shields remarked that he thought he would see what the packages contained, Miss Curry meanwhile continued on her way home. Mr. Shields located Policeman Yerger and together they went to the Sisters' home. One of the packages proved to be a two-handled chip basket. Leaning against the wall nearby was a nursing bottle, about two-thirds full of milk. Policeman Yerger thereupon lifted the clothing in the basket and revealed the face of the abandoned baby. An automobile was summoned and the baby was removed to the hospital.

Fine Wrestling Match.

Mart Henderson, of Altoona, a noted wrestler and known to followers of mat events as the "Masked Marvel", gave a wonderful exhibition of wrestling to a discouragingly small audience in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium last Friday night. Henderson was opposed by Bodeski, who proved to be a physical giant but who lacked Henderson's skill and who was thrown twice by the Altoona man. Henderson was cool and seemingly unconcerned no matter how hard Bodeski rushed him. In fact, he was master of the situation at all times, so much so that the efforts of his taller opponent at times appeared ridiculous. Bodeski put up a good bout but was simply outclassed. Bellefonte didn't respond very well to the opportunity to see a wrestler of Henderson's class, due possibly to the fact that the public in general here was not familiar with his feats on the mat. However, they missed something well worth seeing. There were two other events on the program. One was an exhibition wrestling match between Dale and King, of Penn State, in which the latter gained a fall. In a boxing bout Locke, of Penn State, was outpointed by Robinson, a Bellefonte Academy student.

Foreigner Killed in Quarry.

Fred Worrick, a foreigner employed at one of the quarries of the American Lime & Stone Co., below town, was crushed to death by a massive rock while at work last Thursday. A number of men were in the quarry at the time. A large rock rolled upon Worrick before he had a chance to get out of its path. He was regarded as an exceptionally good workman and had been employed at the quarry for some time.

PROMINENT ODD FELLOW IS TAKEN SUDDENLY ILL

H. B. Eberly, of Williamsport, Has Paralytic Stroke.

CONDITION IS CRITICAL

Stricken While in Bellefonte on Business for Next Week's Celebration—Removed to Hospital—Entire Right Side Affected.

Henry B. Eberly, City Controller of Williamsport and prominent in Odd Fellow circles, was taken ill suddenly while in Bellefonte late Wednesday afternoon. He was removed to the hospital here and his condition is most critical.

Mr. Eberly was apparently in the best of health when he was seized with a stroke of paralysis. His right side from head to foot is affected. He is unable to speak and is virtually unconscious.

Mr. Eberly is secretary of the Odd Fellows Anniversary Association and was in Bellefonte on Wednesday on matters pertaining to the celebration here next Wednesday. Disposing of the work in hand he concluded to return to Williamsport on the 6.30 train over the Central Railroad of Penna. He strolled out South Water Street to call on a friend and without the slightest warning collapsed. He was quickly removed to the hospital and word of his illness was telephoned to Williamsport. A Williamsport physician, who is a brother of Mr. Eberly, is with the latter at the hospital. Mr. Eberly is about 65 years old and is unmarried.

BRUMBAUGH CANDIDATES

Petitions Filed in This Congressional District for National Delegates.

Centre County managers in Centre County for Governor Brumbaugh have been active in the last week. Harry Keller has taken personal charge of the campaign in this county in the Governor's behalf. It is said that all State Administration patronage from now on will be subject to his recommendation.

The Brumbaugh forces in the county this week filed at Harrisburg a petition for Herbert W. Ashman, of Philipsburg, for Republican State Committeeman. His candidacy is in opposition to that of J. Linn Harris. Ashman was a candidate for the Legislature two years ago.

Guy B. Mayo, of Smethport, and John C. Arnold, of DuBois, have been entered by the Brumbaugh element as candidates for Republican national delegates, from thi Congressional district. Petitions also have been filed at Harrisburg for candidates for alternate national delegates. One is Nelson E. Robb, of State College. The other Brumbaugh candidate for alternate delegate is from Cameron County. The Penrose candidates for national delegates in this district are W. I. Swoope, of Clearfield, and A. H. Gaffney, of Kane.

MUST ABANDON PAVING

State Highway Department Advises Water Street Improvement is Impossible

At a meeting of borough Council on Monday evening a letter from State Highway Commissioner Cunningham explained that the proposed paving of South Water Street and Willowbank Street, from High Street to the borough line, must be abandoned. It was proposed doing the paving as a State-aid project, the State paying one-half the expense and the county and borough one-fourth, each. A recent ruling of the Attorney General's department at Harrisburg was to the effect that the construction or improvement of a State-aid highway section on a State highway within the limits of a borough is not permitted under the law. Mr. Cunningham merely advised borough Council that this ruling disposed of the Water and Willowbank Street project.

Council considered a number of routine matters, approved bills for current expenses and adjourned.

Paid $100 Fine.

Three men from Lemont were arrested last week charged with killing fish with dynamite and at a hearing in Bellefonte before Squire Woodring on Friday one of the trio entered a plea of guilty and paid a fine of $100. The two others were discharged. The three men were arrested last fall on the same charge but exceptions were filed to the return made to court by the committing Justice of the Peace and last week these exceptions were sustained by Judge Quigley.

Charley Watson, of Clarence, greeted his numerous friends in town on Tuesday.

State Agriculture Notes.

The average price of potatoes on the farms in Pennsylvania on March 1 was $1.00 a bushel compared with a price of 58 cents a bushel a year ago.

In Susquehanna county there has been fine sleighing for a long period and the farmers have cut twelve inch ice for their ice houses.

The average price of horses has dropped twenty-five per cent. and mules fifteen per cent. in some sections of York county.

It is reported to the Department of Agriculture that the winter has been hard on the honey bees in various sections on account of the many warm spells.

In 1915 the estimated average price of alfalfa seed as sold by the farmer in the State was $7.75 a bushel while at the present time the estimated avarage price is $11.70 a bushel. The average price as bought from dealers is $13.20 a bushel.

Despite the good prices brought for horses at the rural sales in many sections of the State there has been a tendency of of a drop in prices, the estimated value being $158 against $171 a year ago.

There has been a wonderful increase in the average price of sheep, lambs and wool in Pennsylvania over a year ago and there promises to be an awakening of the sheep industry if legislation to curb the ravages of the dogs can be obtained. Present averages show sheep sheep worth $6 10 per hundred pounds against $5 00 a year ago and lambs worth $8 50 a hundred pounds against $7.10 a year ago. Wool averages 28 cents a pound against 22 cents a year ago.

Grip and Pneumonia Take 4,000.

Pneumonia and grip took large death tolls in all parts of the State during the winter, nearly 4000 persons succumbing to these diseases in January, according to the report of the bureau of statistics of the State Health Department at Harrisburg last Saturday. The large increase in deaths due to these two diseases made the death and birth rates nearer equal than they have been in months. The number of deaths was 13,510 and the number of births 18,114. Ordinarily the birth rate is about double that of the death rate.

—and I'll Be Laid Up Several Weeks Longer

WHY, a brick fell from the third floor of a new building and connected with my head. In a hospital for a long time with a cracked skull, fever, delirious, and heaven knows what all.

But every month, regular as clockwork, along came a check for $200 from the ÆTNA. You see, my ÆTNA ACCIDENT POLICY calls for $50 weekly while totally disabled, $25 a week while partly out of commission, and also surgeon's fees or hospital bills. Makes it hard for me, eh? Man, I'm an optimist of the purest ray serene.

What did the policy cost? If I told you how little, you'd say I'm still raving. Come up tonight and I'll tell you. So long!

Ambition vs Health.

The accumulated knowledge of science regarding the workings of the human mind demonstrates how little has been accomplished toward discovering the relationship between the physical and the mental. It is however, plain to even the most casual observer that the condition of the mind makes a profound impression upon our health, says State Health Commissioner Dixon.

The intensity of life in modern civilization makes demands upon us in many ways that are in excess of those which a more primitive environment required of our forefathers. This often results in a mental and nervous condition detrimenal to good health.

We Americans have often been accused by observers from other lands of living under an intense strain and struggling to advance our financial and social status greatly at the expense of higher aims. It is unquestionably true that ambition often leads us far from the paths of peace and contentment. Our national ideals seem to lean strongly toward the achievement of pecuniary success. In seeking this thousands of men and women sacrifice themselves and fail to observe the simple rules of right living which their intelligence teaches are necessary for the maintenance of health.

Those who plunge unrestrainedly into the exhausting struggle for great riches and power cast aside what the philosophers of all ages have deemed most worth while, the peace of an humble mind open to impressions of the wonders and beauties of Nature, art and the sweetness and purpose of a simple life.

WOMEN'S WOES

Bellefonte Women Are Finding Relief at Last.

It does seem that women have more than a fair share of the aches and pains that afflict humanity; they must "keep up", must attend to duties in spite of constantly aching backs, or headaches, dizzy spells, bearing-down pains; they must stoop over, when to stoop means torture. They must walk and bend and work with racking pains and many aches from kidney ills. Keeping the kidneys well has spared thousands of women much misery. Read of a remedy for kidneys only that is endorsed by people you knew.

Mrs. J. F. Thal, 23 W. Thomas St., Bellefonte, says: "I suffered from backache and severe pains across my loins. I also had headaches and dizzy spells. My kidneys caused me a lot of annoyance. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co., and one box removed the backache and trouble from my kidneys."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Thal had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Palmer and Liebel Clash.

According to a Washington despatch war has formally been declared between the Old Guard and the re-organizers in the Democratic party of Pennsylvania. Last Friday night the chiefs of the respective factions met face to face in Washington and served notice upon each other that from now on it would be war to the death. All hope of compromise is past and there will be no further exchange of diplomatic notes.

Following a dinner in Washington Friday evening, where the loyal Democracy met with the big chief to preach united effort in the forthcoming campaign, A. Mitchell Palmer, national committeeman and the Administration's personal representative in Pennsylvania, met Representative Michael Liebel, Jr., of Erie, a member of the Old Guard, who has announced his candidacy for national committeeman in opposition to Palmer. The meeting took place at the Shoreham Hotel. After they had shaken hands, after the fashion of prize fighters about to begin a battle, Palmer remarked:

"I see you have shied your castor into the ring."

"Yes," said Liebel, "I have."

"But I thought you wanted harmony in the Democratic party in Pennsylvania," said Palmer.

"So I do."

"Well, you are adopting a queer way to get it," said Palmer.

"That may be," replied Liebel, "but I have not been treated right. I have been discredited with the Administration and have been placed in a false light here."

"I guess you have got all you were entitled to," said Palmer. "I see you don't want harmony. What you want is a fight and believe me, you are going to get it. When this contest is over you will realize that you have been in a real contest."

"So be it," said Liebel. "Lay on, MacDuff."

Good Roads Day.

In the week that has elapsed since Governor Brumbaugh issued his proclamation fixing Thursday, May 25 as "State-wide Good Roads Day," plans have developed rapidly for making this day a success.

The Governor has placed himself at the disposal of the State Highway Department and will spend "State-wide Good Roads Day" at work on the roads, as he did last year.

Organizations, formed in many counties last year to further the object, have taken up their work anew and are making arrangements for a large turn-out on the highways this year.

In a number of counties where there were no organizations last year, steps have been taken to secure united action.

In Venango County last year work to the estimate of $10,623 00 was done on the highways on "State-wide Good Roads Day." The number of men who worked in that county last year was 2,092 and 426 teams were employed on 184 miles of roads; 83 carloads of slag being used to repair the condition of the highways.

Venango County's example is typical of the counties which had live organizations working to make the day successful. Arrangements are being made in many other counties to surpass the work of last year and reports received at the State Highway Department indicate that "State-wide Good Roads Day" of 1916 will set a high record of achievement for future years to meet.

Ask Congress to Give Title.

Representative Graham, of Philadelphia, last Saturday presented in the House at Washington the report of the Judiciary Committee favoring passage of the Senate bill intended to cure a defect in proceedings of the United States Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania and validate title to property in Clearfield.

The dispute grew out of the failure of the American Union Telephone Company. The phone company's property was conveyed to Mrs. Glenora G. Harris at private sale by order of the United States Court in which the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted. Representative Graham's report states:

"About December 1915 Mrs. Harris agreed to sell the property in question to the Clearfield Order of Elks. The attorneys for the Elks decided that the United States Court was without power to order a private sale. It became apparent (the receivers having long since accounted and been discharged and the bankrupt estate settled) that only an act of Congress could cure this defect and give Glenora G. Harris a marketable title."

Fake Veterinarians.

Farmers throughout the State are warned by the Department of Agriculture against persons who have been representing themselves as versed in veterinary medicine and surgery and against all other schemes connected with the livestock industry.

Recently the State Livestock Sanitary Board received notice that a man was fined $100 for practicing veterinary surgery in an eastern county where he was filing horse's teeth. Another man collected thousands of dollars from Pennsylvania farmers as the representative of a cattlemens protective organization. He has been prosecuted by some of the farmers from whom he collected money and is awaiting court trial on a charge of false pretense.

The Department of Agriculture urges farmers not to enter into any associations until they have been fully investigated. The new veterinary medical examination law prohibits anyone from performing the functions of a registered licensed veterinarian. The licensed veterinarian carries a State registration card which farmers should always be shown before they allow any treatment to their cattle.

Charles S. Askew Dead.

Charles S. Askew died at his home in Bell Air, Md., on last Saturday evening of a complication of diseases. He had been unwell for a number of years, following a severe case of blood poisoning developing from an infected wound. Mr. Askew was born in Altoona November 15, 1876, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Askew, both deceased. He resided all his life in that city until about six years ago, when he took up his residence in Osceola Mills. He had worked for a number of years in the car shop offices of the Penn'a, and on leaving Altoona became identified with the mining operations of T. C. Whitehead in the vicinity of Houtzdale and Osceola Mills. He was married to Miss Nell Reeves, of Osceola, in April 1910, by the Rev. Father M. J. Desmond, of the Immaculate Conception church of that place, and two years later moved to Bell Air, Md., where with his father-in-law, Orlando Reeves, he conducted large farming interests.

The U. S. Patent Office
—Recognizing Something New

Has Granted a Patent, Both on the Form of Flake and Process of Manufacture of

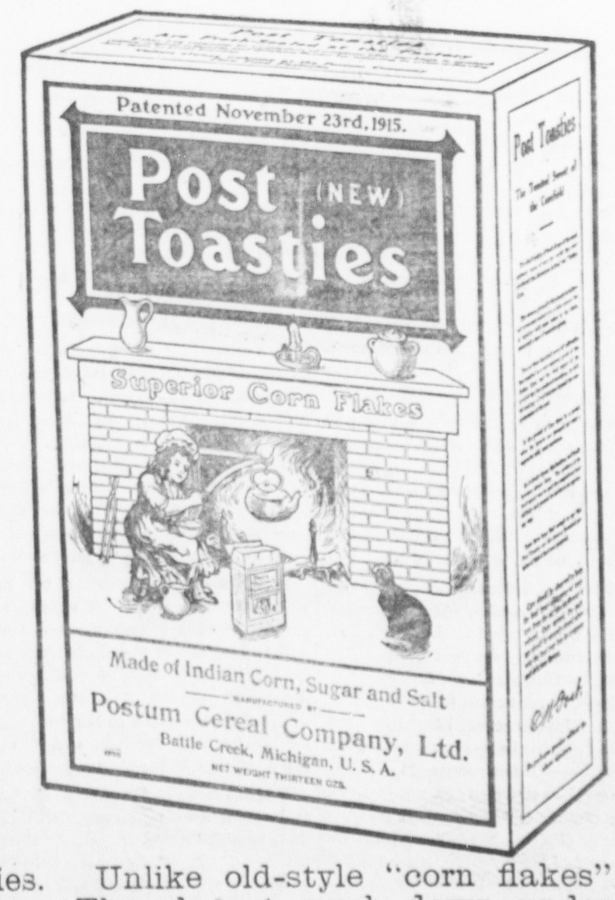
New Post Toasties

This remarkable recognition--no other corn flake on the market has achieved it--marks this new food as something distinctly different from "corn flakes" of the past.

What is This Difference?

Compare New Post Toasties with the average corn flake--observe the tiny bubbles which cover their surface. These bubbles are caused by a new method of cooking, rolling and toasting under quick, intense heat.

By this process the true corn flavour is developed in all its sweetness. Eaten dry they are a delicious morsel. With cream or milk they are a revelation to the taste Note the "substance" of New Post Toasties. Unlike old-style "corn flakes" they do not break or "chaff" in the package. They do not mush down under milk or cream. They are wonderfully delicious.



Patented November 23rd, 1915.

HIS MONUMENT

It Was One to the Living, Not the Dead

By AGNES G. BROGAN

Old Charlie's life began with the coming of the children's mission to the shore. Eighty birthdays or more had he known on this same sandy beach.

Then one day when the tempting odor of his favorite ginger cookies filled the air Charlie's real life began. It was a group of romping Fresh Air mission children who attracted his attention. They were drawn to his place, no doubt, by that same delicious odor Charlie's glance was forbidding. "Now, look a-here," he commanded. "You scamper. Don't come a-trackin' up my steps!" But one little maiden lingered unafraid. Beneath a shock of fair curls her witching eyes looked up at him.

"If you please," she said, "I would like three cookies." Charlie chuckled. "Three!" he exclaimed. "I want them," the little girl told him, "for the Borinsky children. They have never had any cookies." Behind their spokesman the Borinsky children waited hopefully.

"Land!" said Charlie. (It was his one exclamation, but he brought forth a plate heaped generously.) "No, thank you," the unusual young person remarked. "I did not ask for the cookies for myself." Grinning widely, old Charlie watched her down the sands.

"There's a nervy one," he murmured delightedly. "Spunky, too." The next morning she was back again, this time bearing in her arms a white bedraggled kitten. Uninvited, she confidently walked inside, appropriating Charlie's own big chair. "You'll keep the kitten, please," she said; "it cried last night all around the mission, and they would not let it in."

"Land!" ejaculated the old man. "Do you think I want to take keer of a cat?"

"You will," answered Miss Goldilocks. She smiled winsomely. "I like you," she said. Charlie took up the kitten, something unaccountable stirring in his breast. "You can come here and see it," he told her, "as often as the mission folks'll let you." He paused perplexedly. "You ain't like the rest of 'em," said Charlie. "How'd you come to get here?"

"Mother thought it best," the child replied in her pretty, precise way. "It is hot and crowded in the city, where we live, and we had not money to pay for country. You see"—she raised grieved eyes to his—"our daddy went and left us."

"Left a little thing like you?" said Charlie. But he added in quick encouragement, "He'll be comin' back again." The child shook her head. "He can't, mother says, because he's broken his leg. People with broken legs cannot walk." "Sho!" said Charlie slowly. "That's so—if mother told you." "And," continued the child, "mother has to work very hard to keep us both, so she cannot go away to find father. But if I stay here long enough perhaps she can save money to go. Then we will all be happy again. We were so happy! That's why they call me Joy."

"Joy!" whispered old Charlie. For a moment his roughened hand rested upon the curly head. "It's a good name," he said. Suddenly Joy leaned forward. "Couldn't you go to find father?" she asked.

Charlie smiled. "Mebbe," he said "mebbe, some day."

When he had finished reading his paper that evening Charlie drew forth in the lamplight an old tin box. Painstakingly he made a record of the savings within and added his evening's toll. Then, with furrowed brow, he bent to study a map and a drawing which had for him never failing interest and charm. The map was the plan of a nearby cemetery, the drawing that of a tall marble tombstone. If in this uncertain life old Charlie had lived and labored unrecognized it was his one dream and determination to leave a mark after death. Here his name should be pointed out to future generations, the resting place of Charles Jaffray—Charles James Jaffray. And so, gloating one morning over his little store, Joy, coming to visit her kitten found him.

"What's it for?" she asked in her straight, childish way. And, delighting at last in a confidant, old Charlie told her.

"That," said Joy softly, "will be beautiful, and I shall come to place flowers about your monument."

When upon a never forgotten day Joy brought her mother to visit him Charlie thought at first that two children were coming together across the sands, so young and sweet and fair was the mother of Joy. Looking up with the same frank smile, she thanked him for his care of her daughter.

"Land," said the pleased old man, "that wan't nothing! Reckon"—he smiled—"reckon Joy's my first love. She was telling me about her father," he went on, lowering his voice—"how he went away and didn't come back. I'm real sorry. Seems you put her off lettin' on he'd broke his leg."

"But it's true!" cried the mother of Joy, her cheeks flaming and her eyes aglow. "He is the finest man in the world, Joy's father, the best. We should not have married on so little money. Our people told us so. But we did"—she tossed her head defiantly—"and we were happy, so happy, until the accident. It was an automobile, and it injured his hip. At the hospital they could do little, and, oh, the suffering!" The girl covered her face, but soon her voice rang clear again. "Even then I could have managed had he trusted me. He was brought home from the hospital to spend his life in a wheeled chair. But I found a position, and it was good. After hours there was extra typing. Joy alone seemed to suffer, needing more care than I could give. So I decided to put love before pride—to send her here with those good people for the summer. Then, sitting there all day alone, her father reasoned wrongly. 'A double burden is more than even willing hands can bear,' he wrote. I found the cruel self sacrificing note when I came home at night, and he was gone. He would have good care, he assured me. But the place where he was going should be kept secret that I might not come to break his determination. Always I would have news of him, and he would hear of me. But until some easier way might be opened my husband would efface himself for my sake. Letters came, many and often, all dated from New York. How he had managed to get there I could not know."

In silent sympathy old Charlie reached over and touched the little mother's hand.

"And does it," asked the child at evening, "take so many dollars to buy a tombstone?" Charlie was counting the money back into the box, his fingers moving shakily. He nodded. "Reckon you'll have to take keer o' your cat for a day or two, Joy," he said. "I've got to go into town."

"Oh," she cried, her eyes wide and shining, "are you going to find my papa now? you said 'some day, mebbe.'" Charlie's horny palm closed in promise over the little soft one. "If I kin," he answered simply.

From hospital to hospital went the bent old figure, and then Charlie turned into the broad gateway of the place of his last hope. New York, he felt sure, was not the true hiding place of the crippled father. Letters might be forwarded from there in order to keep from the loved one the humiliating fact of the home city "poor farm." And Charlie found that he was right. His sharp old eyes soon sought out the wheel chair even in its secluded corner. A young man, lifting his head in quick alarm at a stranger's approach, dropped it again at sight of the seaman's bent figure.

"How do?" said Charlie pleasantly. "Pretty tiresome, I reckon, a-settin' round all day. Been like this long?" The young man nodded brusquely.

"And they ain't no cure?"

"None." The word was shortly spoken. Sympathy, deep and true, shone in every line of Charlie's wrinkled face. The sick man, regarding him quietly, smiled in sudden friendliness. "Unless," he added, "I were rich; then there might be a chance."

"Sho!" Charlie was interested. "How's that?"

"There's a clever old customer, an Austrian surgeon, who sometimes fixes up a job like me. He's in New York now, but it would take more money than I'll have in all my crippled life just to bring him to look me over."

"Land!" murmured Charlie softly. "That's too bad!"

The young man laughed. "Oh, well," he said, "don't you worry about it."

"Too bad," Charlie repeated as he shuffled down the long corridor to the doctor's door.

"Come in," called a brisk voice, and old Charlie entered the attending physician's office.

* * * * * * *

Joy was waiting for him when he returned at evening—waiting upon his doorstep in the early twilight, the white kitten in her arms.

"You didn't find my daddy," she sighed resignedly. "But 'maybe' another day you'll bring him back to me."

"Mebbe," said old Charlie.

When the little mother came again upon visiting day she hurried eagerly across the sands with Joy.

"Listen, kind friend," she called, and waved aloft a letter. "It is from my husband." She paused breathlessly. "Such wonderful news. I must share it with you. He feared to write too hopefully, yet could not keep his hope from me. Some great Austrian surgeon has consented to take his case—to operate there in New York. The doctors have arranged everything. If the operation is successful my husband will walk again." The girl's voice sang. Charlie turned reverently from the radiance of her eyes.

"An' then you'll be happy?" he asked. There was a subdued eagerness in the question.

"Happy!" She breathed the word tremulously.

"Reckon," said Charlie slowly, "that's real livin'—makin' folks happy."

It was Joy who finally told him the great news. How daddy had been sent to New York, where a great surgeon, like the wizard in a fairy tale, made broken limbs straight and strong. "And soon," said Joy, nestling close in the old man's arms, "my daddy will walk home again. But I'll come to see you after because I love you so, and—and I'll be sorry when you have your monument."

"As for that monument," said Charlie, "I've changed my mind. Reckoned it'd be better to rejoice in a livin' monument here than to have a piece o' marble when I'm dead."

"I'll bring you flowers," murmured the child sleepily. Old Charlie gazed tenderly down upon the little head against his breast. Over his rugged features came a look of great content. "Reckon, dearie," he said, "you're a-bringin' me flowers right now."

Two International Spies

By ETHEL HOLMES

Before the pan-European war we Americans supposed that our affairs did not interest other powers. Since then we have awakened to the fact that every government has a spy system within the territory of every other government. England, France, Italy and other powers keep secret service workers in other countries. Of all the Germans have the most perfect and extended organization. And yet some of the principal fields of the working of the German propaganda in America have originated with the British secret service men. While these systems may have been strengthened and enlarged since the opening of the war, there is reason to believe that they have always existed.

Austria and Russia have always been watching each other on account of the persistent encroachment of the two on the Balkans. Some years ago two Russian girls, sisters, went to Vienna as spies for the czar upon the intentions of the emperor of Austria regarding schemes to carve Austrian provinces out of Balkan territory. One of these girls, Maria, obtained a position as copyist in the Austrian foreign office. The other, Vera, kept house for the two in rooms in an apartment building. Since they were in the pay of the Russian government they did not want for anything.

Maria was under the orders of Caspar Grenthall, a man who conducted one of the bureaus of the department in which she worked. He was a handsome and otherwise attractive man and when he made love to her she reciprocated. When they were not engaged in the office he took her out to the gardens and other places of amusement and by his kindness gradually won her heart.

It was not long before Grenthall proposed marriage to Maria. Though she loved him, she hesitated to accept him. Indeed, his being a spy complicated the affair, making her very unhappy.

Then suddenly Maria received a shock. One day when she was at work a girl occupying a desk beside her slipped a bit of paper among those before her. Maria unfolded it and read that she was suspected of purloining a certain document that had passed through her hands. Grenthall had won her in order to find out if she were stealing such documents. Her room would be searched that evening.

Maria was not only disturbed at discovering that Grenthall had deceived her, but in terror at the suspicion that existed against her. Either her life or a long imprisonment would pay the penalty. As soon as office hours were over she went to her room and told her sister what had occurred. She had stolen the paper in question, and it was concealed in their apartment. Taking it from its hiding place, she was thinking what to do with it when there was a sound of persons coming up the stairs without. She had only time to thrust the paper into her bosom when the door was thrown open and in walked Grenthall, accompanied by several men. He made no apology for his entrance or for having played the spy upon Maria. He and his men began a search of the rooms.

Evidently he had expected to surprise Maria and, if the missing paper was in her possession, to find it concealed in her apartments. Not finding it after a thorough search, it occurred to him that it might be on her person. He sent one of the men with him for a woman to make the search. When she arrived he told her to find out whether Maria had the paper.

Maria, when the man who had won her heart to betray her entered, gave him a look of anger, then, when the searching began, fell upon her sister's neck, sobbing piteously. While the two women were clasped in each other's arms, their bosoms close up against each other, Vera contrived to take the paper from her sister's bosom and slip it into her own.

Maria was the one suspected, but it was not to be expected that Vera would be let off without examination. Believing that she would be searched, she cast about for some means of getting rid of the paper. She started to leave the apartment, but Grenthall ordered her back. When the woman came she made the search in one of the bedrooms, the men remaining elsewhere. Vera was with her sister. Maria was required to take off her clothes, which were carefully examined by the searcher and laid upon a table. While her back was turned Vera contrived to slip the paper into a pocket of one of the garments that had been examined. Her sister saw her do this, and hope sprang up within her.

When the search was finished and nothing found the result was reported to Grenthall. Having done all he could in the matter, he withdrew his agents and went away while Maria was dressing.

The paper was a valuable one for the Russian government, and the sisters were anxious to save it. That night Vera, dressed as a boy, stepped out of the apartment and gained a lower suite without being noticed. The next morning, though a watch had been established, she got to the street and away without being recognized. Maria went to the foreign office, but was discharged. Had it been known instead of suspected that she was guilty she would have been arrested.

Vera succeeded in reaching Russia with the paper and was paid a large price for it. Her sister finally rejoined her there.

SCENTING A CRIME

How a Russian Police Inspector Formulated a Theory.

WORKING UP A MURDER CASE.

He Made All the Known Facts In the Case Fit Into Each Other Perfectly and Then Proceeded to Demonstrate His Accuracy of Deduction.

We are not encouraged to believe that the Russian police inspector is the equal of the trained French official if Anton Chekhoff's story of the deductive method in Russia is illustrative.

One morning a young man hurried into the office of an inspector of police and reported that his master, an officer of the guard who had been separated from his wife and lived alone, had been murdered. He was greatly excited. The inspector went with him at once to the scene of the tragedy.

When he arrived at the house he found the door to the officer's bedroom locked, the key on the inside. The servants, unable to awake their master, had concluded that he was dead. The inspector found the door uninjured. He had it forced open. The bed had been tossed about, the pillows on the floor. On a table near the bed was the officer's watch and some silver coins. The officer and his clothing were gone except for a single boot that lay on the floor. The inspector examined the room carefully. The only thing he found was a partly burned safety match. It was known that the officer did not smoke and used only sulphur matches for his candles. He examined the garden below the window. The grass and some bushes had been trampled. He found a piece of cotton on some twigs and some fine threads of dark blue wool. At some distance from the window, in the garden under a bush, he found the second top boot.

The inspector came to the conclusion from the evidences, that the man had been strangled and his body taken out through the window.

The fact that the watch and money were undisturbed showed that the purpose of the crime was not robbery. The safety match indicated that some person above the ordinary was connected with the affair, since peasants or common servants would have only sulphur matches. The fact that one boot remained in the room made the inspector believe that the guardsman had been killed while he was undressing. The finding of the other boot in the garden indicated that this one had been partly removed and had fallen off while the body was being carried away.

The inspector in his report reconstructed the crime: On the evening in question the guardsman, who had been on a prolonged debauch, went to his room drunk. As he sat on his bed taking off one of his boots, he had been attacked and smothered with the pillow. During the struggle the candle was knocked over and afterward one of the assassins relighted it, striking a safety match. When the man was dead his body had been taken out through the window and carried across the garden. As it passed the lilac bush the remaining boot, partly removed by the man before he was attacked, dropped off.

The inspector, having arrived at this deduction, determined to locate the safety match. He went to all the shops in every direction, but not one of them carried in its stock such a thing as a box of safety matches. Finally, at some distance from the scene of the tragedy, he found a shopkeeper who had a single pack of such matches. It was a broken pack, with one box missing. The shopkeeper remembered precisely who had purchased this missing box. It was the wife of the guardsman, a big, masculine woman of unusual physical strength. She lived near the apartment in which the guardsman had been murdered. It was now night, but the inspector went at once to the woman and charged her with the murder of her husband.

"I know all about it," he said. "Take me at once to the place where you have concealed your husband!"

She got a key from a nail on the wall and went out into the courtyard. The inspector followed. They finally reached a little house at the end of the garden. The woman unlocked the door and they entered. By the light of a candle the inspector saw the long body of a man lying motionless on a bed in the corner of the room. He approached to examine the murdered body.

But here his deductions went to pieces. The supposed dead man sat up, and the explanation of all the tragic incidents appeared. The guardsman was going to bed every night drunk. His wife heard of it and went across the garden to his window to remonstrate with him. He put the window up and, seeing who it was, threw his boot at her. She was a resolute woman in masculine efficiency. She climbed in through the window, thrashed the drunken guardsman soundly, dragged him across the garden and locked him up in the bath house, where she determined to keep him until he should be sober. He had been thus a prisoner for one day, while with swift deductions the inspector had worked out his complicated murder.—Melville Davisson Post in Saturday Evening Post.

A Restoration

By BARBARA PHIPPS

When I was a girl of twelve I one day looked in a mirror and was struck with the difference between my appearance and that of my brothers and sisters. While they resembled one another, I looked like none of them. Their hair and eyes were black; mine was auburn. They were stocky of figure; I was taller than any of them and lithe. Besides these differences, their faces were unrefined; mine, I was pleased to notice, was rather pretty. I was also better dressed than they.

It did not exactly occur to me that I had been born of other parents, but from that time I began to suspect that there was something in me different from what was in them. When I was fourteen my mother, who was as different from me as the others, told me that I must earn by own living. At the same time she confessed that she was not my mother. She said that when I was a baby I had been given to her to be taken care of, and up to that time a certain sum of money had been paid her regularly for my keep and a specific amount to be spent on my clothes. These payments had been stopped, and this was why I must shift for myself.

Since the day I looked in the glass and discovered the difference between me and the others of the family I gradually lost whatever of affection I had felt for them. When therefore she whom I had supposed to be my mother informed me that I must earn my own living I was content to leave them. I found a position as nursemaid for a little boy two years old and lived in the house where I was employed.

The mother of my charge was kind to me, and one day I told her my story. She was very sympathetic and told me that my experience, together with my appearance and a native refinement there was in me, led her to believe that I was the child of persons of the upper class. This is all she said to me. I wondered if she would not offer to help me find my parents, but she did not. When I spoke of trying to find them she said that it would be like hunting for a needle in a haystack, especially since they did not wish to be found. Were this not so they would seek me. The fact that my allowance had been cut off was especially discouraging.

Had it not been for this last mentioned fact I believe I should have made an effort to find those of my own flesh and blood, though I don't know how I could have made a beginning. As it was, I was obliged to be content with my lot. The only objection to it was that I had a feeling in me that I had been born in a higher sphere than that of nursemaid.

One day when I was seventeen years old my supposed mother came to see me and told me that a great change had taken place with regard to me. She was commissioned to take me to my parents.

"But," she said, "they don't know where you are, and it depends upon me whether you reach them or not. If you go to them you will be rich and can afford to pay me for what I do for you. Here is a note for $10,000, due when you come of age, a year from now. If you will sign it I will not only return you to your parents, but will furnish the evidence that you are their child."

I referred the matter to the father of my charge, and he said that it seemed best that I should sign it. I being a minor, it would not be legal anyway. I signed the note, and the same day the woman drove with me to a handsome house, and on entering I was received by a lady who took me in her arms and wept over me. I had become used to noticing my appearance in contrast with those of my own supposed station, and no sooner did I see this lady than I knew by my resemblance to her that she was my mother. Her hair and mine were the same shade of auburn.

Later a gentleman came and took me on his lap and caressed me. He was my father.

It was many years before I got all the reasons for my having been put in charge of the family with whom I grew up. My father made a clandestine marriage with one to whom his parents were opposed. Soon after I was born my father consented to abjure his wife, and I, when born, was hustled off without its being known to my grandparents that my mother had been married or I born to her. My parents agreed to all this, expecting that it would be temporary. But my grandparents were relentless, and my parents, becoming poorer and poorer, at last were unable to remit my allowance. My grandfather was finally taken ill and on his deathbed relented. He had left his money to charity, but at the last moment changed his will, leaving the property to his son.

Immediately after his death my parents sought me. It turned out that my supposed mother had received $10,000 for my return. The fact that I had also been forced to pay the same amount was not pleasing to my father, and he threatened to prosecute the woman for fraudulent conduct unless she surrendered the note I had signed. This she did.

For a long while after the great change in my life I could no nothing but think about my newborn happiness, and it seemed that my father and mother were bent on making up the many years they had been deprived of their child by the affection they lavished on me.

All this occurred many years ago. I am now happily married.

DELUDES ITS ENEMIES.

Cunning of the Castor Oil Plant in Protecting Its Seeds.

Dressing them up to look like foul tasting bugs, this plant protects her children from hungry birds. If it were not for their disguises the children might be eaten and never have a chance to grow and become big plants. The wise mother plant realizes this, hence the masquerade. It's the castor oil plant.

To the average person anything relating to castor oil is not regarded as much of a delicacy. Birds, however, think otherwise. The seeds of the plant are like candy to them.

So the mother plant schemes to protect them. When she sends them out into the world she clothes them in variegated and fantastic dress until the seeds resemble coccinella beetles.

Now, if there is anything birds dislike more than anything else it is a coccinella beetle. As a result they make a wry face when they see the castor oil beans and pass them by.

These seeds are oval and about a half inch long. They grow in spiny capsules, three seeds in each capsule. To show that the castor oil plant is no newcomer on the earth, archaeologists write of finding seeds in tombs of ancient Egyptians.—Philadelphia North American.

FIRE BAGS AT SEA.

The Kind They Used In the Day of the Old Tinder Box.

Every whaler and sealer that sailed the seas in the days of wooden ships carried a fire bag. This was a tarpaulin bag about a foot long and six inches wide lined with waterproof material, with interlinings of oilcloth and thick flannel. Into this was placed the flint and tinder box for kindling fire, and the bag was then securely fastened with double flaps and tied to keep its contents dry.

It was the special duty of the second mate to look after the fire bag and in case of shipwreck to attach it at once to his person by means of stout straps provided for the purpose. Thus if officers and crew were cast away on some deserted shore in the desolate arctic circle the means of obtaining a fire to warm themselves by and to heat food and drink would not be wanting as long as the precious fire bag was safe.

The steam whalers and sealers of the present day still carry a fire bag stowed in the lifeboat with the bread and water, but now it is of rubber and contains half a dozen tin boxes of matches.—New York Press.

Double Eyed Fish.

There is a fish equipped with bifocal eyes, one-half of the lens for seeing above the surface of the water and the other for submarine use. This characteristic also gives the fish its popular name—double eyes.

The fish inhabits the shores of South America. Sometimes they swim with the eyes half out of water. Examination shows that each lens is divided into two parts by a dark band. The half above the band is out of water and the other half below the surface.

Naturalists tell us that the fish's eyes became "double" from its practice in swimming with them half submerged. Nature made the part of the eye above water adapted for seeing in the air, while the other part remained adapted for vision under water.

The double eyes grow to about a foot in length and in Brazil are caught for food.—Philadelphia North American.

A Widow at Nine.

Marriage at the age of thirteen, as in the case of a woman who has just died at Shoreditch, would not have been regarded as extraordinary in the seventeenth century. In those days children of noble families, particularly wards in chancery, were frequently wedded at the age of nine and sometimes even at five. Little Moll Villiers, the Duke of Buckingham's daughter, was not merely a wife, but a widow, at nine, and we read of her romping in the garden and climbing cherry trees in her widow's veil. In almost every instance, however, such marriages were in name only, and the little wives were allowed to reach their teens before taking up the burdens of wedded life.—London Telegraph.

Quite the Contrary.

"I hear all the prisoners broke out who were in jail last week."

"What! A general jail delivery?"

"Oh, no; an epidemic of measles!"—Baltimore American.

Heredity.

Mother—Geraldine's teacher says she is on the merit roll again. Grandmother—She's her father's girl, bless her! Hiram always did the most meretricious work.—Judge.

FOR CONGRESS

THE REPUBLICAN is authorized to announce the name of Charles H. Rowland, of Philipsburg, Centre County, as a candidate for re-election to a second term in Congress in accordance with the custom and usages of the Republican voters and Republican organizations of the Twenty-first Congressional District, composed of the counties of Clearfield Centre, McKean and Cameron, at the Uniform Primary election, May 16th, 1916.

FOR ASSEMBLY

THE REPUBLICAN is authorized to announce the candidacy of H. B. Scott, of Philipsburg Borough, for nomination on the Republican ticket for Member of the House in the Legislature from Centre County, subject to the decision of the primaries to be held on May 16th, 1916. Mr. Scott respectfully asks the kindly support of all Republicans at the primaries.

THE REPUBLICAN is authorized to announce the name of C. L. Gramley, of Rebersburg, for nomination on the Republican ticket for Member of the House in the Legislature from Centre County, subject to the decision of the primaries to be held on May 16th, 1916. Mr. Gramley will appreciate the support of all Republicans.

FOR NATIONAL DELEGATE

WILLIAM I. SWOOPE
of Clearfield, Clearfield County, Pa.

Candidate for Delegate to the Republican National Convention to be held in Chicago, June 7th, 1916, from the 21st. Congressional District, composed of the counties of Clearfield Centre, Cameron and McKean, subject to the action of the Republicans of the district at the Uniform Primary Election, May 16th, 1916.

It is almost a month now since the President has issued any statements to call attention to the "sinister" persons whom he dreams of as trying to make him go to war with Mexico.

Senator Tom Taggart announces that he will not be a candidate to succeed himself, though he declares confidence that Indiana will go Democratic this fall. This is another instance where action speaks louder than words.

A side light on Bryan's state of mind may be found in the fact that he has recently published a list of ten reasons why the Democratic party should win this year's election—and the name of Woodrow Wilson is nowhere mentioned.

Critical folk may laugh at the battleship Marjorie Sterrett is trying to have built with contributions of dimes from patriotic Americans—but the fact is that this slow process of going about the task is likely to take hardly longer than the tiresome methods of delay which characterize a Democratic Congress.

Champ Clark says that people who talk about Congress being behind with its work this winter are liars. The most conspicuous critic of congressional dilatoriness whom we recall is Senator Oscar Underwood of Alabama—and we leave the matter in the hands of those two distinguished Southern Democrats for further discussion.

As a matter of fact we do not think it a serious thing for the country if Congress is dilatory with its work. Generally speaking the less a Democratic Congress does the better off the country is. And there is surely no crying demand from any quarter for the brand of legislation which this particular Congress has shown to be its specialty.

The reconciliation between Mr. Roosevelt and Senator Root is not to be wondered at. They are both sincere lovers of their country and, whatever may have been their different views as to what the country needed for its glory and its honor, there is no doubt that they now know that what the country does not need is any more Wilsonism. Having reached this point in their conclusions, everything else is easy. Roosevelt and Root, working together, gave this nation golden years of prestige and of progress. When they fell apart and their friends lined up on one side or the other the golden days ended and the country has since led a drab and dreary existence. And the main thing to remember, now that they are together again, is not that their thoughts must necessarily be of themselves. It is the party of Root and of Roosevelt that looms up the most prominently. It is that party which can end Wilsonism. To this not only Root and Roosevelt, but all other members of the party—together with a good many Democrats,—will bend their energies.

The May American Magazine.

In the May American Magazine are the opening chapters of Philip Curtiss' brilliant new serial "Between Two Worlds," a love story of stage and society people. There is also a large amount of good fiction and a number of excellent special articles and features.

"Courtesy in Business," by Fred C. Kelly, proves that politeness pays actual dividends and has been heavily invested in by hard-headed business men throughout the country.

"A Daring Baseball Prediction" is made by Hugh S. Fullerton, easily the foremost authority on baseball in the country. He tells why the Red Sox will win the 1916 World's Championship.

"Kentucky," by Irvin S. Cobb, for the series on "The Glory of the States," gives an amusing acount of the Blue Grass and Moonshine Country.

"Better Doctoring for Less Money" is continued by the famous physician, Dr. Richard C. Cabot, chief of the medical staff of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

"Have I Missed or Escaped Something?" by U. S. Congressman Edward J. King of Illinois is the story of a man who asks if his difficulties were a handicap or a benefit. "Have You Made Your Will?" by Frederick Halsey, and directions for making it, by Charles S. Cutting, give valuable information on a duty that is shirked by ninety-seven per cent of our business men. "Plays Worth Seeing," by Walter Prichard Eaton, gives a critical discussion of the present dramatic productions.

Fiction is contributed by Henry Wallace Phillips, Jack Lait, John A. Moroso, Philip Curtiss, Olive Higgins Prouty, and Leila Burnham Wells. There are the results of two prize contests. "Habits," and "InterestingPeople" include articles by Dr. Edwin F. Bowers and Oswald Garrison Villard. This number of The American Magazine is good from cover to cover.

Don't Talk Too Much.

Recently a voluble salesman was trying to close a deal with a good customer. The salesman was doing all the talking, and the buyer was becoming not a little annoyed. Several times the customer started to speak, but the salesman would choke him off and start on another line of argument. Finally the manager saw what was up and suggested to the seller that he allow the buyer to say something. This the buyer did and quickly. He said that he had been trying for half an hour to tell the salesman that he would take the goods. — Farm Machinery.

His Gilded Promises.

"Why did you break off the match? Didn't you love the girl?"

"Yes, I loved her, but I saw that our married life would not be happy. It was better to part in time, was it not?"

"I suppose so. But how do you know that your married life would not have been happy?"

"Well, I had promised her a grand piano and an automobile. In fact, I had made her more promises than I could keep."—Pittsburgh Post.

A Wild Goose Chase

By F. A. MITCHEL

This is a copy of the will of Edward Spangler, who died leaving a daughter who was engaged to Thomas Ormsby, a young man of whom the testator approved. Mr. Spangler was considered a very singular personage, and his will bears out the opinion.

"Believing that between husband and wife the one showing the greater thought, resource, ingenuity — indeed, those faculties which go to make up smartness—should rule, I bequeath my fortune either to my beloved daughter, Imogene Spangler, or to the man she shall marry, the inheritance to be decided in the following manner:

"My property, consisting of twenty bonds of $5,000 each, is buried in the state of Florida. They will be found either on the right bank of the St. Johns river, at its junction with the ocean, or at Glencove Springs, twenty miles northeast of St. Augustine. The finder of the bonds—either my daughter, Imogene Spangler, or her husband—shall be their possessor."

"Surely, Tom," said Imogene after reading the will, "father must have been delirious when he signed his will. You'd better go to Florida and visit the two places named in the will. Quite likely you'll find a pointer in the one where the bonds are buried."

"I think you had better go with me. We can make it a bridal trip."

"Very good. Name the day."

Imogene and Tom were duly married and preparations made for the wedding journey. The evening before their start Imogene went into her late father's library, where the old gentleman had kept many atlases—for he was much interested in geography—with a view to locating the points where they were to hunt for the bonds. Mr. Spangler had set great store by a revolving plaster globe four feet in diameter. Imogene found St. Augustine on this globe, but not Glencove Springs, so she got down an atlas containing a sufficiently detailed map and located the points exactly.

The couple left the next morning for the Flowery State, passing gradually from winter into summer. When they reached St. Augustine Tom proposed that they put up at a third rate hotel or a cheap boarding house. He did not approve of spending money freely until they had found the money to spend. But Imogene said that, being on her wedding journey, she proposed to live like a bride. Tom was overruled, and they went to the most expensive hotel.

After a few days' rest from their journey Tom proposed that they should proceed to look up their fortune. Imogene seemed to be in no hurry.

"I'm comfortable here," she said. "Suppose you go to both points."

"But in case I find the bonds I shall be the owner of them."

"Suppose you are? That won't make any difference to me. I think the husband should have the money anyway. Papa was like most men; he thought that power in the family is lodged in the one possessing the funds. He should have known that women don't work that way. Their power lies beyond dollars and cents. You go ahead and find the bonds."

Tom was puzzled. For him to go off to hunt for a fortune on such meager information as he possessed seemed ridiculous. He showed a disposition to give up the matter.

"Oh, go on!" said his wife. "You'll get mighty tired sitting around with me long before the honeymoon is over. Quite likely you'll find a clew. Father wasn't such a fool as to hide a fortune where no one could find it."

She kissed him and patted him on the back and sent him away. He went first to the Springs, where he spent a day looking for a sign. Finding none, he proceeded to Jacksonville and thence to the coast. But never a sign did he see. As for digging anywhere without a sign, he was not so stupid as that. So after three or four days' absence he returned to St. Augustine. He expected to find his wife disappointed at his failure, but she met him with a smile.

"You don't seem to be much depressed at the loss of a fortune," he remarked.

"Isn't it a wife's duty to cheer her husband in times of adversity?" she replied.

"I hope you'll be able to keep it up when the bills begin to come in."

"Brush your hair and get that disappointed look off your face. Things are not so bad as they appear. I have something to tell you. The night before we left for this place I went into father's library to look upon his globes and maps where these places you have been are. Something in the words Glencove Springs sounded suggestive. 'Springs, springs,' I kept saying. Why I did it I don't know, but I pressed my thumb on the globe at the point where Glencove is and broke through the surface. Taking a knife, I began to dig and found the bonds. Here they are."

Going to her trunk, she unlocked it and took out twenty 6 per cent gilt edge bonds.

Tom kissed her enthusiastically. Then suddenly the smile left his face, and he said:

"This makes you governor of the household."

"Not at all. I expect to defer to you in everything," was the comforting reply.

But she never assigned the bonds to him, and he learned in time that her father was not so crackbrained as was supposed.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kerchner arrived home Thursday from their honeymoon tour. They were met at the station by the calithumpians who led them to a waiting buggy which was attached to the rear of Holtzworth's car. With a drum corps leading the way they were escorted to the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Callie Calhoun, where dinner was served. A big reception and kitchen shower followed in the evening at the home of Mrs. D. E. Fisher. The newly married couple were the recipients of numerous handsome and valuable gifts. Just about the time the guests were through with refreshments the serenaders broke loose and turned out a brand of noise that was something awful. There was nothing to it, the serenaders refusing to budge until the bride and groom would appear. Mr. and Mrs. Kerchner finally made their appearance and were given a great hand by the serenaders, who then retired to Stere's restaurant, where they had their treat in the shape of a liberal supply of candy, cigars, etc. It was the finest treat the forty serenaders recalled ever having received.

William A. Ward Dead.

William A. Ward, a former resident of Philipsburg, and a veteran of the Civil war, died on Thursday evening, April 13, 1916, at the Soldiers Home, Dayton, Ohio. His death was the result of blood poisoning from an old army wound, superinduced by heart affection. The deceased, who would have been 80 years of age had he lived until July next, was born at Gatesburg, his parents, Simon and Elizabeth Ward, being among the honored residents of Centre county back in its early days. He was the last of a family of ten brothers and one sister. Six of the brothers were in the Civil war at one time, two of whom never returned. William A., enlisted in 1864 in Company L, Second Pennsylvania heavy artillery. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and at one time an elder. He was a gentleman whose courteous and kindly disposition made him many friends, and his passing away will be lamented by all who knew him. Mr. Ward is survived by four daughters, viz: Misses Mary and Ella, of Philipsburg; Mrs. Hallie, wife of John Young, residing in Kansas, and Miss Susannah, who teaches school in Minneapolis, Minn. The body was removed to Philipsburg on Saturday and the funeral was held from the Ward home on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

A DOUBLE MISTAKE

By ELINOR MARSH

"Ah, Mr. Edmonds! Happy to see you. But I confess that I am surprised."

"At what, may I ask?"

"Mother wrote me that you were very young looking for your age, but I did not expect to see a man who cannot have reached middle age."

"And I have been told that you, too, do not look your age."

"I? Why, how old do you think me?"

"A man has no right to think at all about a lady's age. I was given to understand that you do not look forty."

"Forty!"

"That's what I was told. To me you don't look over twenty. But perhaps there are two of you about twenty each."

"You speak in riddles."

"Did you never hear of the man who said that a woman of forty should be like a bank bill that may be changed for two twenties? Ha, ha!"

Mr. Edmonds was the only one of the two who laughed at his own joke. Miss Fielding looked at him, wondering if he were not a trifle daft. Her mother, who was a widow, had written her that she was engaged to be married to a Mr. Edmonds, who would call upon her; that he was of suitable age for the mother and she hoped Gwen would be pleased with him. Was her mother to marry a man who appeared to be fifteen or twenty years younger than herself, who cracked jokes about changing the woman he was to marry for two girls? What did it all mean?

As for Edmonds, his father had written him of his engagement and had asked him to call on his fiancee, who would be at home after a certain date. He supposed he was calling on his future stepmother, and Gwen supposed she was receiving her future stepfather.

"I must confess, Mr. Edmonds," said Gwen coldly, "that you are quite a different man from the one I expected to see."

"And I confess," was the smiling reply, "that I am very agreeably disappointed in you."

Gwen looked at him with a blank stare. "What kind of a person did you expect to meet?" she asked.

"A woman twice your age."

"And I expected to find in you a man from fifty to sixty."

"My father in that case would be from eighty to a hundred."

"I am not considering your father. I am speaking of a man of suitable age"—

"But would you consider a man three-quarters of a century old a suitable match for a girl"—

"Girl! Do you consider my mother a girl?"

It was now Mr. Edmonds' turn to be astonished. "I was given to understand that both your parents were dead," he said.

"My father is dead, but I assure you that if you are to talk as nonsensically to my mother as you have been talking to me you'll find her very much alive. I assure you she will not brook a proposal to change her for two young girls."

"All I have to say," rejoined Mr. Edmonds, with a puzzled look on his face, "is that, while I know nothing whatever of the prospective mother-in-law, the bride to be is very charming."

"What mother-in-law?"

"My father's. I fear that if she is disposed to be cranky there will be trouble in the family. My father is a well disposed man and I am sure will be able to get on with his bride, but as for a mother-in-law, if she is like the most of them it will be a monkey and a parrot business between them."

Miss Fielding stood looking at Mr. Edmonds with amazement and growing anger for a few moments, then swept out of the room, saying as she went that her mother must have gone stark, staring mad. Reaching the front door she went out, shutting it behind her not over carefully.

"I wonder what the governor means," said Mr. Edmonds to himself, "by tying himself up to a young thing like that and evidently with a fine temper. And won't she make it hot for me!"

He waited until Gwen had had time to get some distance from the house, then went into the hall, took his hat, crammed it down on his head, and went his way.

The next day Mrs. Fielding returned, learned that Mr. Edmonds had called and asked Gwen if she was pleased with him.

"Pleased with him!" said Gwen. "Mamma, have you gone mad to engage yourself to a young fellow who says he would like to change you for two girls, each twenty years old?"

"Gwen! What do you mean?"

"Why, mother, he's young enough to be your son."

"He is sixty-two."

Mother and daughter looked at each other without speaking.

"Are you sure that it was Mr. Edmonds who called?" asked the mother.

Gwen went to a dresser, took a card from it and handed it to her mother.

"Why, this is Harry's card."

"Harry?"

"Yes, stupid! Didn't you see the junior on it? Harry is Mr. Edmonds' only son. He is worth $250,000 in his own right and would make a good catch for you."

"Catch!" cried Gwen in dismay. "I expect he considers that he has caught a tartar."

Hanged the Clever Forger.

Of curious petitions against the death penalty being enforced one recalls the eighteenth century case of William Lyland, who was sentenced for forging a bill for £7,114 on the East India House. The forgery was a work of art. No less than thirty signatures were imitated, and at the trial not one of the victims could swear that the signature was not his own. However, with the help of the paper manufacturers Ryland's guilt was brought home. Then came the petition of his friends. So clever a man ought never to be hanged, they pleaded. His craftsmanship should save him. It gained him a respite. He was allowed to finish a fine engraving he had begun, but nothing more. Though the engraver was a favorite of George III., that king quite failed to see how a forgery could be excused on the ground that it was a clever forgery.—Pall Mall Gazette.

When Tolstoy Tried to Fly.

From earliest childhood Tolstoy was remarkably observant of the things that were going on in the world around him. Thus, while still in his teens, we find him taking an interest in the art of flying that was too practical to suit his devoted mother. With characteristic thoroughness he invented a design of his own and with equally characteristic courage proceeded to put it to an immediate test from a second story window. But the boy who was afterward to find food for thought for the whole civilized world was not destined to make his mark as an infant aeroplanist. He fell instantly to the ground and, though by great good fortune no bones were actually broken, the concussion was so great that young Tolstoy afterward slept for sixteen hours on end.

A Curious Relic.

A curious relic of Louis XVII. is the "game of dominos" made of pieces of the Bastille which were given to the dauphin before he and his parents left Versailles forever. It is said that when the box containing it was brought in the queen exclaimed to her bedchamber woman, Mme. Campan, "What a sinister plaything to give a child!" The sinister plaything is, with other revolutionary objects, preserved in Paris.

Suits Some; Death to Others.

"Iron may be good for the blood of some," remarked the worm as the angler threaded the hook through him gently, "but I fear it will be the death of me."

And yet the fish that swallowed the iron a little later was quite carried away with it.

SENDING A MAN BY MAIL.

It Is Quite Possible Under British Parcel Post Rules.

The parcel post has made its usefulness felt in many ways, unexpected as well as foreseen. But the English parcel post does one surprising thing that has not yet been introduced into our own system.

An Englishman wished to reach a customer living in a remote part of Balham, one of the suburbs of London, and it was very necessary that he find him quickly. Knowing nothing of the district, he called at the general post-office at St. Martin's-le-Grand to consult a directory. On explaining his case to a clerk he was amazed to learn that he could be sent to the address by parcel post by paying a fee of threepence a mile.

The gentleman had never heard of such a thing, and it is said that very few persons in England know that it can be done. He was placed in charge of a messenger who was familiar with all parts of the city and was soon on his way. The boy carried a printed slip on which was written a description of the "parcel" in charge under the heading "Article Required to Be Delivered," and before leaving the customer's house both the customer and the gentleman had to put their signatures on the paper.

The limit in weight for anything delivered by parcel post in England is generally understood to be eleven pounds, but there is one clause that reads, "A person may be conducted by express messenger to any address on payment of the mileage fee."—Youth's Companion.

Treasurer's Sale of Unseated Land

for non-payment of taxes for the years 1914 and 1915, as well as certain lots of Seated Land. In accordance with the provisions of the Act of Assembly, entitled "An Act directing the mode of selling unseated lands for taxes and other purposes," passed the 13th day of March 1815, and the various supplements thereof, together with the other various Acts of Assembly relating thereto, I, David Chambers, Treasurer of the County of Centre, hereby give notice to all persons concerned, that unless the taxes due and remaining unpaid on the following described tracts or parts of tracts of unseated land, as well as such lots of seated land, situated in said County of Centre, be paid before the day of sale, the whole or such part of each tract of said lands as will pay the taxes and costs chargeable thereon, will be exposed to public sale or outcry, at the Court House in the Borough of Bellefonte, in said county, commencing on the second Monday of June next (the 12th day thereof) and continuing, by adjournment from day to day, until all are sold.

Miss Hitty's Discovery

A Story of the "Movies"

By CLARISSA MACKIE

In the village of Edgewood were many straitlaced persons. To visit that town and become acquainted with the inhabitants was like going back a century, when the theater, playing cards and all manner of amusements were considered wicked. There is a story of a man who paved the way for the enjoyment of the game of billiards in the God fearing town of Philadelphia during the early part of the last century. He said that marbles were not considered wicked—why billiards? Marbles were stone, while billiard balls were ivory. Marbles were shot by the hand, billiard balls by a stick. Marbles were played on the sidewalk out of doors, while billiards were played on a level bed in the house. Wherein lay the difference?

The good people of the Quaker City, whose children could not be prevented from playing marbles, concluded after this discovery had been made that billiards were no more sinful and withdrew their opposition, and thereafter billiards became fashionable.

It was the fate of Miss Hitty to make a similar discovery in Edgewood.

Miss Hitty met Dick Hedges at a church sociable. Had she not met him at a church sociable she would probably never have met him at all, for dancing was frowned upon in Edgewood, and without dancing young people's parties are considered dull. The consequence was that, no one caring to go to the trouble of getting up a party that was sure to be dull, parties were not given.

But it would have made no difference where these two happened to meet, for at once both recognized that they were made for each other, and after that they provided their own places of meeting, and very soon they were engaged. Unfortunately Hedges was poor and but one opening appeared for him; that was a position in an American tea house in China. Dick availed himself of it and tore himself away from his betrothed. Weeks, months, even years, passed, and he did not return.

When the Palace movie theater opened its doors in Edgewood the house of entertainment was looked upon with disapproval by the church members.

At first many of them declined to even penetrate the mysteries beyond the white painted doors and the many posters outside, but gradually one by one the villagers were lured inside until the venture promised to be a profitable one. Even the ministers of the different churches visited the theater from time to time to censor the plays, but on the whole it was decided that it was a harmless diversion.

After Miss Hitty Morton made her important discovery Edgewood took the Palace theater to its heart.

Every one knew that Hitty Morton would have been married long ago if Dick Hedges had ever returned from his long voyage to China. But Dick had never returned, and it was believed that he had died. One by one his family had died or moved away from Edgewood until there remained only his old sweetheart, Hitty Morton, who lived on Honeypot road, in a little red cottage near the bay. Some people whispered that Dick had been faithless to Hitty.

The first time Hitty entered the walls of the Palace she was bewildered by the crowd of silent people, the flashing pictures on the screen, the novelty of it all, for she had never been in a theater in all her simple life.

But the screen pictures laid their magic spell upon her, and she became a devotee of the movies. Twice a week as regularly as the program was changed Hitty Morton could be found sitting in the same seat halfway down the room, her bright eyes eagerly following the stories told by the screen.

Deacon Peddie, who passed the collection plate in church, always scrutinized Hitty's contribution to detect whether or not she was enjoying the semiweekly amusement at the expense of the church, but invariably Hitty's silver dime would drop into the plate. Perhaps Hime Dayton, the butcher, might have told another story—that Hitty was skimping on her food. She was eating meat only twice a week now instead of three times.

One night in particular the posters were more alluring than ever. There had been a change of program that day, but there was a missionary meeting, and Hitty had postponed her going to the following night. Now she paused in front of the brightly lighted entrance and studied the colored posters.

"All For Love." That sounded thrilling, with a rescue at sea. Pictures of the sea always attracted her.

"Visits to Strange Lands." Hitty thrilled with anticipated pleasure, for she dearly loved these travel pictures, giving glimpses of strange lands and strange people, perhaps the countries that Dick Hedges had visited. He used to say that when he got a vessel of his own he would take her with him to the far east. Hitty still lived these voyages in her day dreams.

She glanced up and down the village street.

Yonder was the church. The basement was brightly lighted, for there was to be a missionary barrel packed that night. In Hitty's arms were half a dozen white shirts she had stitched for some unknown missionary in Asia. She was expected to help pack the barrel.

Before her were the alluring posters.

Hitty glanced once up and down the street and then disappeared through the swinging doors. She did not know that Mrs. Deacon Peddie, passing on the other side of the street, had glimpsed her backsliding sister and was even now detailing the circumstances to a shocked group of listeners about the missionary barrel.

Hitty found her accustomed seat, and being rather short in stature she sat down on the bundle of shirts and so did not miss a thing all evening.

The sweet romance of "All For Love" was slowly reeled off to the sentimental rapture of the very young and a few lonely souls like our own Miss Hitty. She sat through it all, her round, sweet little face uplifted to the screen, with a look of wistfulness that a newcomer saw as he sat down nearby.

If any one had been interested it might have been noticed that the bronzed newcomer divided his interest between the pictures and Hitty Morton's face. After awhile the seat beside Hitty became vacant and in the darkened theater the stranger glided across the aisle and occupied it. Hitty never even turned her eyes from the screen; she was accustomed to this change of neighbors.

On the screen appeared the first of the travel pictures, which were Hitty's delight.

A great steamer was sailing from San Francisco for Japan. She felt herself one of that group of travelers hurrying up the gangplank of the great liner.

The scene shifted to the first port of call, Honolulu. Dark eyed maidens with garlands of flowers about their necks and other garlands for sale, queer vehicles, a swift view of a volcano, then aboard the steamer. A glimpse of the social life on board, then the approach to the fairy islands of Japan.

Breathlessly Hitty watched the shifting scenes, fascinated by the oriental sights. She almost thought herself there with Dick, as she had dreamed. While she watched she turned a little worn ring on her engagement finger. Any woman in Edgewood would have told you that it was Hitty Morton's engagement ring.

The man beside her glimpsed the ring, and his face grew pale.

At last the steamer approached the yellow shore line of China. Then she dropped anchor off Wusung, in the mouth of the Yangtze river, and transferred her passengers to the small tugs which were to convey them up the shallow tidal river called Whangpo to the city of Shanghai.

When the picture of the public wharf at Shanghai was thrown upon the screen Hitty leaned forward. She wanted to scream.

There in the crowd of eager faces watching the arriving passengers was a familiar one—the face of Dick Hedges, grown older, perhaps, but Dick Hedges, nevertheless, smooth shaven, with a captain's uniform on his broad shoulders and a gold laced cap on his handsome head.

It was Dick—Dick Hedges, her Dick in faraway Shanghai!

The much maligned moving picture screen had shown her that he was alive!

"Dick! Dick! Oh, Dick!" she whispered sobbingly.

A strong, warm hand covered hers, and the man beside her looked down out of Dick Hedges' eyes. He wore a captain's uniform, and in his other hand was a gold laced cap.

"Dick!" Hitty thought she screamed the word, but it did not leave her lips.

"Easy, lass; easy, lass!" he whispered gently, and then while the screen displayed further pictures of these far countries Hitty saw no more. Was not life unreeling for her a greater romance than could be depicted on a screen? Had not the sea given up its dead?

Dick whispered the meager details of his story. He had been lost at sea and then rescued, and when he had returned to civilization some one from Edgewood had maliciously told him that Hitty Morton had forgotten him and was married to another man.

Only a little while ago had Dick heard that Hitty was still unmarried, and so he had returned to Edgewood to ascertain if she still cared for him. He had dropped into the theater and glimpsed her face. He sat beside her and saw that she wore his ring alone upon her third finger. He had seen her face when his own picture—taken unknown to himself—had leaped out of the crowd upon the wharf in Shanghai. He had heard her murmured words, her unconscious cry of joy at seeing him.

"Then I knew that you still loved me and that I was not too late," he whispered as they followed the crowd outside. "My ship sails from San Francisco on the 21st, Hitty, so we must be married at once so that we can start on our honeymoon voyage. You remember how we planned it, eh?"

Of course Hitty remembered. They walked along in happy conversation, the package of shirts tucked under Dick's free arm.

Mrs. Deacon Peddie and a group of missionary ladies overtook Hitty Morton and brought her to a realization of her sins.

"Hitty Morton! Where are those missionary shirts?" demanded Mrs. Peddie. "We're holding the barrel open till morning so's they can be put in."

Hitty took the package from Dick's grasp, but he snatched it back again.

"If these are shirts, men's size," he said genially, "I guess I'm the missionary they'll about fit. I want 'em for my troosaw. Hitty and I'm going to be married in a day or so."

The Co-operative Plan

A Farmer Tries It on an Auto

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

I was driving across the country with a horse and buggy when I came to the wreck of an auto in the ditch, and a farmer was tinkering at it. He had a sledge, crowbar, an ax, a cold chisel and a screwdriver and had worked up a nice little state of perspiration.

"You appear to have a wreck here," I said as I drew in my horse.

"Appear!" he shouted as he looked up. "If this isn't the durndest wreck anybody ever saw I'll eat my hat!"

"How did it happen?"

"How does anything happen to an auto with a fool driving it?"

"Was it yours?" I asked, scenting a story.

"One-fifth of her was mine up to last night. Now the whole sad remains belong to me. Did you ever hear of the co-operative plan among farmers?"

"Lots of times."

"Waal, then, this was co-operation in buyin' and runnin' an automobile, and this is one of the results of it. The other result is that I am about $300 out of pocket and have lost a widder who was goin' to be my wife. If you want to hear all about it I'll tell you, for I guess it hain't any use to tinker any more at this blamed old thing."

The farmer took a seat on the mortal remains of the auto and drew a long breath and proceeded to say:

"There was Tom Evans, Joe Baxter, Jim Williams and Si Perkins. They are all farmers and live about here. They are all married men, and each one has a gang of children. As for me, I am an old bachelor, but I was a-sparkin' of the nicest widder woman in this county. The four men I have mentioned come over to my house one evenin' a month ago, and Tom Evans he asks if I would go in with 'em on the co-operative plan to buy an auto.

"'How much?' says I.

"'A thousand,' says he.

"'That's $250 each.'

"'Jest so, Sam.'

"And the auto was bought?" I queried.

"She was, sir. She arrived here glistenin' like a star, and she excited the wonder of folks for ten miles around. We got a feller from town to show us how to run her, and in a'bout a week we was all ready to glide around the country. Bein' I was a single man and mightily in love with a widder, they said I might take the auto out first, which was very decent of them. I felt sure I could run the machine as good as any man in the state. It was a bright moonlight night, and the whippoorwills were singin' and the katydids chirpin', and that widder woman should promise to be mine before we returned."

"And did she?" was asked as the farmer heaved a long sigh.

"She didn't, stranger, and I'll tell you why. We had gone about a mile as steady as an old horse when the auto shied at a stone in the road, ran through a rail fence, wrecked the auto, and the widow gave me fits."

"It gets interesting," I said.

"Kinder interestin', stranger—kinder so. We got a machinist to tinker $20 worth of tinker, and the old machine could run again. Then it was Tom's turn. He has a wife and five children, and they all piled in. They was clippin' along as happy as larks when they came to a crossroad. The auto was for keepin' straight ahead, Tom wanted to turn to the right and his wife to the left, and the result was that the machine run into and knocked over the guidepost and then tried to climb a fence. The whole family took a spill and was scattered for twenty rods around. No one was killed, and there was no broken bones, but the bruises are yet blue, and Tom still walks bent over like an old man on [illegible] this time we had all got skeery of the machine; but, it bein' now Jim's turn and he not wantin' to be called a coward, he took out his family for a promenade. As the other accidents had occured at night, Jim went out in the afternoon. He thought there might be somethin' in the night air that affected the old critter. There was seven in the family, and they was climbin' the hill beyond the red ridge when all to once the auto gave a snort and stopped in her tracks.

"'What's the matter?' asked Jim's wife.

"'Durned if I know, but she's got to go!' he answers.

"And she did go, sir—she went backwards. There was screamin' and yellin' and swearin', and Joe's wife slapped his face, but nothin' did any good. That auto kept on goin' backwards until it dumped them all in the river, which was about three feet deep at that time. They was shook up and bruised and half drowned, but they were lucky for all that. They waded ashore and left the old auto lyin' on its back in the river."

"But you got it out again?" I asked.

"Yes. We had to," was the reply. "It was in tryin' to get the old critter home ag'in that she suddenly bolted and run into a telegraph pole and wrecked herself as you see her."

"And she won't be tinkered up again?"

"She can't be. There's nothin' left to tinker, unless the blacksmith thinks he can make five wise men out of the five fools who bought her and lost about $230 apiece. I used to think co-operation of farmers was a beautiful thing, but durn my cats if I ain't through with it!"

Appendicularly Speaking.

"Why did you rush out of the doctor's office this morning?"

"He said he wanted to see me apart, and I wasn't taking chances."—Farming Business.

Proving Him Wrong.

"From your bumps I should say you are a very quarrelsome fellow."

"Well, you're a liar! See? And if you say it again I'll smash your jaw!"—Exchange.

FREAKS OF A GENIUS.

The Man Who Smashed Glasses In a London Tavern.

One day a bulky, tall, pale faced gentleman with bushy, restless eyebrows entered a London tavern. The waiter did not ask him for his order, but immediately brought him a plate of bread and cheese and a glass of ale. Having consumed his lunch, the guest sat upright in his chair for awhile, leaning his hands on a heavy walking cane and staring blankly at the opposite wall as if in a dream.

Of a sudden he gave a start. He seized the empty glass and dashed it to the floor with all his might, smashing it to atoms. He then reflected for a moment, laid a coin on the table, got up and left the inn without a word to any one.

After his departure another guest had the curiosity to ask the waiter whether the gentleman who had just gone out was not wrong in his head. Quoth the waiter:

"Oh, no, sir! That's nothink unusual with 'im, sir. 'Ee's broke maybe a 'undred glasses since 'e's been a-comin' to this 'ouse. 'E don't seem to know it when 'e does it. 'E just gits a-thinkin' and seems to git hangry at somethink e's thinkin' about. It's the great Lord Macaulay, sir."—St. James' Gazette.

What Love Is.

Love is a journey into a new country, and, like any other journey, its length depends entirely on what the country has to show. There should be woods with silent undergrowth, where comfort lives; bright rivers of vitality, clean cities, built on foundations of fine tradition and splendid with the towers of learning and religion; green fields, where simple thought and senses play like young cattle, and mountains so high that as one climbs one breathes quickening air not known to ordinary men—so high that by day the earth lies clear beneath like an open map, and by night the stars are just beyond arms' length above. In such a country a man can live forever.—Rebecca West in New Republic.

Military Salute's Origin.

The military salute had a curious origin, if tradition is to be believed. It is said that it originated in the days of the tournament, at which a queen of beauty was chosen to preside. The knights and their esquires and all who took part in the tourney on presenting themselves before the queen lifted each one a hand level with the brows as though dazzled by the light of her presence. A nicely thought out compliment this, and, though its significance is now forgotten, the natural dignity of the gesture has preserved it as an everyday mark of recognition of a superior rank.—London Chronicle.

Willing to Be the Goat.

"'Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?'" quoted the impassioned orator.

Then he paused a moment to let it take effect.

"Well," spoke up a half inebriated man in the audience, "I'll be the goat. Why should it?"—Chicago Tribune.

Office Ornaments.

"Yes, ma'am," commented the office factotum whom long tenure of office had made a bit censorious, "some of these here young ladies about this office does precious little work. They seems to think they's intended for office ornaments."

Then, seeing a shade cross the lady manager's face, he hastened to add reassuringly, "But, ma'am, you ain't no ornament."

Reunited the Rock.

Martha's Vineyard, on the Atlantic coast, for long has had a split rock as a landmark. Then the action of the waves in continually washing through the cleft sucked out the sand and allowed the tops of the two pieces to come together again after being separated for years.—Indianapolis News.

A Museum Sensation.

There was a sensational incident in the British museum on Feb. 7, 1845—the disastrous attack by a visitor on the priceless Barberini vase, belonging to the Duke of Portland. As there was no law then for the punishment of such an act of vandalism, a fine of £5 (the value of the glass case) could only be imposed. But it led to the passing of an act for the protection of works of art from similar danger.—London Standard.

THESPIANS HERE APRIL 29

Penn State Students to Present Musical Comedy "Here and There."

The Pennsylvania State College Thespians after eighteen seasons of success, appear this year in a two act musical comedy entitled "Here and There" at the Garman Opera House on Saturday evening April 29. The Thespians are not unknown in Bellefonte and according to the management the productions of former years will be surpassed in many ways. The costumes shown by the organization are in accordance with the latest styles, and the scenery is both beautiful and harmonizing.

In the first act the scene is laid in the industrious town of Lemont, Pennsylvania. A county fair is in progress and Myra, a mysterious dancer, "The Muse of Motion" is one of the components of the exhibits. She is accompanied by Professor P. T. Bailey, an old-fashioned side-show operator. Both are being pursued by a dark oriental gentleman, known as Oister Bey, who came from the sultanate of Besopotamia in search of the dancer. Numerous attacks on the management of the side-show are made by Mrs. Sue Palmer, wife of the mayor of Lement, and finally Myra is requested to leave. Tobias Flint, the political power of the town, concludes that he must go in search of the dancer, and the scene is transferred to the gardens of oriental Besopotamia. After a series of complicated events the Sultan's daughter, who is Myra the dancer, as well, is married to a Penn State student, and the plot is ended.

The cast is ably supported by a chorus of sixteen, including eight charming "girls". The Skating Chorus and The Russian Ballet are features deserving of especial mention. The twenty musical numbers include the latest song hits from such shows as "Around the Map", "Very Good Eddie", "Stop, Look and Listen" and "Katinka", and the lyrics for these songs have been written by Mr. C. Leon Downing of "The Mask and Whig" fame.

The patronesses may secure tickets at the advance sale at Garman's store Wednesday morning April 26 at ten o'clock. General sale of tickets will take place at Parish's store on Saturday morning, April 29 at ten o'clock, and the box office at the theatre will be open Saturday afternoon and evening.

Included among the patronesses are: Mrs. Archibald Allison, Mrs. R. Russel Blair, Mrs. Lewis Daggett, Mrs. W. L. Daggett, Mrs. Florence Dale, Mrs. David Dale, Mrs. H. E. Fenlon, Mrs. J. O. Canfield, Mrs. James Roberts Hughes, Mrs. Harry Keller, Miss Mary Linn, Mrs. John Love, Miss Virginia McCurdy, Mrs. J. Thomas Mitchell, Miss Helen E. C. Overton, Mrs. J. I. Olewine, Mrs. James H. Potter, Mrs. Henry C. Quigley, Mrs. E. H. Richard, Mrs. Horton S. Ray, Mrs. Thomas A. Shoemaker, Miss Mary S. Thomas, Mrs. H. S. Taylor, Mrs. Jonas E. Wagner, Mrs. W. Harrison Walker, Mrs. James C. Furst, Mrs. R. H. G. Hayes, Mrs. John Shugert.

Had Foot Caught in Saw.

J. D. Hicks, of Stormstown, met with a painful accident last week, by which he lost a portion of his right foot. He was engaged in sawing timber for Harry Fisher on a tract at Centre Line. He was operating the carriage upon which the logs were conveyed to the saw. It was Mr. Hicks' custom to ride back on the carriage after a log had been sawed through. In this instance he stood too close to the saw which caught the side of his foot cutting off a portion of the heel. His injured foot was dressed at the Bellefonte hospital.

Child Drowned in Well.

Clifford, the 9 years old son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hebden, residing near the Monarch shaft, beyond Philipsburg, was drowned in a well at the home of his parents. The little fellow went to the well to get a cup of water for a neighbor who had called. Some time later, when the child's absence was noted, a search was made. His lifeless body was finally found in the well.

TOWNE TOGS

FOR YOUNG MEN

The Preferred Clothes of the American Young Man

There's hardly a young man in this broad land who isn't familiar with the name of Towne Togs--

And who doesn't know somehow or other---that they are the standard of Quality.

Quality of Style, first of all. The fine, free spirit of design that every young man wants--the smart, new freshness that the designer puts into every line and swing of the coat; the even, custom tailored drape of the perfect fitting trousers.

Quality of Material, as well. Clothes of guaranteed worth--patterns of distinctive beauty--tones and colors that stand out from the crowd.

We have these fine clothes--our new Spring stocks were never so widely varied; never so filled with the kind of styles our own young men want.

Easter is hovering pretty close, remember--and you will be needing new things soon.

There's lots of time--NOW. Later--we can't say. Come in today.
